SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1870.

As the proposition to form a "Third Party" is more canvassed its friends be come less. In its present condition the South can do little is the formation or control of National politics. We must give our sympathy and support to one or other of the parties which divide the people of the North, and we have little fear that the great mass of the Southern people will ever hesitate as to which of the present parties they will give support.

In Virginia the objects for which a temporary and somewhat unnatural State organization was formed having been accomplished, the "new party" is rapidly going to pieces, and old divisions are betheir allegiance to former parties.
